Acheron autem dicitur quasi gaudio carens, That is, wanting joy and comfort, a river so called, that is feigned to receiue the soules of the deceased, because that when men are ready to die, a certaine saddish astonishment doth so subvert the minde and understanding, that death may easily bee discerned to bee at hand: for then the conscience and memory of things that bee done, trouble the minde: which Meere, Lake, or Marsh must first bee passed ouer; nor can the minde choose but bee mightily perplexed in the searching and examining of their life formerly spent. This river is sayd to be the sonne of Ceres, or the earth, because the whole trouble and vexation of the mind, ariseth in the care of getting and keeping of riches. This river gaue drinke to the Titans fighting against Iove, because many wicked cogitations and thoughts doe arise up against the Commandements of God, which if the minde shall cherish and give way unto, hee must needs rebell against the law of God, and become in nature a beast; besides, it is sayd to be of a most bitter taste, because that then the course of our former life being called to account, must needs breed bitternesse and griefe. Vide Nat. Com. & Steph. It is also the name of divers other rivers.

Achilles, is, & Achilleus, ei, ἀπὸ τοῦ ἄχος τοῖς ἰλιεῦσιν ἠγεν λυπην τοῖς τεθνηκόσιν ἀυτὸν γενέσθαι, vel ab ἀ privat. & χειλίας, labro, quasi sine labro hominem dixeris, utpote exusto sub igni, quòd non Ambrosia perunctum cum ille admodum infans lugeret, vel ab ἀ privat. καὶ τὸ χιλὸς, cibo, quod cervorum tantum medullis pastus & educatus sit à Chirone, alii ἀπὸ τοῦ ἄχος λύειν. Id est, solvendo dolorem; erat enim medicus, Pelei & Thetidis filius, quem adhuc infantem mater Stygiis undis immersit: quamobrem invulnerabilis toto corpore factus est, præterquam in ea pedis parte, qua comprehensus ab ipsa fuerat, dum ablueretur. Traditus est educandus Chironi Thessalo, sub quo bellicis artibus ac musicis exercitio proficeret. His mother was warned by the Oracle, that if hee went to the warres of Troy, with other Princes, hee should bee there slaine: Wherefore she sent him in womans apparell, and procured that he should lie secret amongst the daughters of Lycomedes, where hee got with childe one of his daughters called Deidamia, of whom was borne Pyrrhus: but it was prophesied, that unlesse Achilles did help, Troy could not bee conquered, wherefore Ulysses by craft found him out, hee had an armour made him by Vulcan, that by no humane force could bee penetrated: hee was so valiant in battell, that afterwards valiant warriours, and valiant men were called Achilles: he slew worthy Hector, and afterwards was himselfe slaine by Paris. floruit circa ann. mund. 3765. tempore Jephtæ Jud. Δῆλος: i. manifestus sic dict. quod cum antèà mari operta esset repentè sese ostenderit Latonæ, locum ad pariendum quærenti, quum ex ea natus Apollo, qui inde Delius & Diana, quæ etiam Delia dicta est. An Ile in the Aegean sea, being the chiefe of the Cyclades, and because the Heathens conceived that Apollo was borne there; that Iland was ever after consecrated to the gods, insomuch that the Persians when they managed warre against Greece, and had brought to Delos, a navy of a thousand saile, yet the opinion they had of religion, and the reverence to that god, did withhold them from profaning his oracle or attempting any thing against that place where he was worshipped. It was not lawfull to bring up a dogge in the Iland, nor to bury any in it, neither was any to bring forth children there; wherefore if any one were sicke or great with child, they were removed to some of the neighbouring Ilands: This countrey is otherwise called Ortygia, Ortyx, Asteria, Cynthia, Lagia, Chlamydia Cynethus, Pyrpile, Pelasgia, Anaphe, Lon. 55. lat. 36. unde Deliacus, a, um.
